ABORTION SOLUTION

Dear Thomas Alderman (Letters, 5/26):

I can agree with you that we need new slogans regarding abortion. How about "Mandatory Vasectomies"? You want laws to control my body, I want laws to control yours.

TAX BENEFIT FETUSES

I'm sure that women love nothing more than being lectured to on their reproductive autonomy by Thomas Alderman (Letters, 5/26), but assuming that he's sincere in his desire for "an honest discussion" on abortion, I naturally assume that he's a passionate advocate for allowing families to declare a new dependent from the moment of conception and being able to enjoy the tax benefits that come with.

I'm also guessing that he's contacting the Census Bureau and demanding that they adjust their 2020 numbers to add all those fetuses that were overlooked in the counting, "unborn humans" and all.

If not, then why?

PROTESTING GUN VIOLENCE

I was in my bedroom, cold, damp air coming in through my open window, when I heard children's voices coming from University Park. And then I remembered that South Eugene High School had written to parents saying they'd heard word of a potential student walk-out in protest of gun violence in schools.

I walked to the park to observe.

I was so emotionally taken aback that there were children standing up on the soapbox they had carried from school, fearlessly speaking up on their rights for safety in order to protect — children.

The group went into five minutes of silence and then bowed their heads while listening to the names of all the people who died in Texas; and the boundaries I had tried to put up to stop feeling when I heard about tragedies came tumbling down in tears.

Once the rally was done, I began to walk home. Three students came running toward me and asked me, "Are you all right? Can we give you a hug?"

I gladly accepted, thanked them for speaking up and told them, "The power is within you."

Thank you, dear brave children, for being part of the change. May your voices be heard.

DEFENDING 'STUPID DRINKING WHITE BOYS'

I feel compelled to respond to a rather grotesque letter written to Eugene Weekly in the May 26 issue. That letter, abridged: White boys partying outside = "Foolish privilege, soulless losers, self-pity, blaming others for their nothingness." The Weekly urges writers to avoid personal attacks, so I will merely refer readers to that author's previous articles.

That said, it must be a privilege to view the world with such a facile lens. It's far easier to judge people by the color of their skin rather than by the content of their character. An assumption that had these "white boys" been "Black males" (notice the author's inflection), they would have been beaten by police, is destructively reductionist. That type of conclusion adds absolutely nothing to the conversation. At best, it is divisive and polarizing.

I say this as someone who wants radical change in our government, in our institutions and overall equity. Nevertheless, I do not have to qualify who I am nor where I have been. Neither should anyone else. Ever. We are complex characters. Coming to the table without empathy and/or lacking openness just makes you an asshole.

ALABASTER IS REAL

It was written in your recent review of the play — Alabaster, by Audrey Cefaly — that Alabaster was "a fictional town in Alabama." Alabaster is indeed a viable community in Alabama, outside of Birmingham in Shelby County, with a population of 33,373. We offer the following links to validate the existence of Alabaster as a community:

LOOKING FORWARD TO THE REST OF THE STORY

A recent article ("Urban Renewal's Bountiful Harvest," 5/19) seemed to offer answers about projects that had been pushed out of the way for the new Farmers Market Pavilion; however, out of the 400-plus lines published I could only find 18 lines (and that was a generous count) that addressed any details about other projects.

You included a few dissenting voices concerning the project itself (bravo), but the article read like an ad for the pavilion and the title suddenly felt click-baity. I did feel a bit left out, as I am a resident of Eugene, but the life I choose does not lend itself to spending an hour picking out vegetables for a side salad. I did notice in the footnote this is a multi-part series. Are we to learn more about other projects for downtown?

Bonnie MacDonald
Eugene

Editor's note: Yes, as indicated in the note at the end of the story you mentioned, there is a part two, with more on the other projects.

SPEND LESS ON COPS

I cannot describe my disappointment with the Eugene City Council budget. As expected the increase in police spending has not worked, still they need more patrol cars, officers and beds.

Recently, when my family members were in crisis and could seriously be hurt, they did not call the police because they fear police violence and know the police offer no actual solutions. They stay in abusive situations because they know that the police can only hurt and not help them. Many of the calls to EPD revolve around violence like this, but what resources beyond the jail do we have as a community?

Pamela Fouse

We don't have beds at the shelter. You're not going to find a therapist without a long wait or find an affordable apartment so you can leave and live safely away from the violence. If you're having a mental breakdown, there are no inpatient beds or services to help you.

The only answer given is further policing. Never have I heard the City Council discuss trauma-informed practices around building community safety. We have an amazing program in CAHOOTS, but the city refuses to disentangle the funding from EPD, confusing the priorities, and won't offer a direct line to this service in a meaningful way.

There are mass amounts of research and information around the impacts of policing in our communities from the people most affected by it. There are other paths to safety that are not just increasing the police budget year after year.

There is a free course about the prison industry at WorthRises.org. You have an obligation to fully educate yourself for the sake of our community and future. I don't want to live in a police state, and I see nothing in the city's actions or planning that is putting any brakes on the saturation of policing in our community. We can do better and we must. Doing the same thing over and over and expecting different results is the definition of insanity.

The 2022 Congressional Chicken Chat

SEN. RON WYDEN TALKS POLITICS, POLICY AND FRED MEYER WHILE SHARING A ROTISSERIE CHICKEN WITH EUGENE WEEKLY

By Henry Houston

A lonesome bagged rotisserie chicken sits under a heat lamp in the north Eugene Fred Meyer. Sen. Ron Wyden, who had traveled from a Memorial Day event in Medford, exclaims that he's happy to have grabbed the store's last roast chicken on a spit.

Since his election to the U.S. Senate in 1996, Wyden says he's been driven to hold meetings throughout the state and surpassed 1,000 town hall meetings by late 2021. But Fred Meyer, he tells Eugene Weekly, is where he can meet people and grab a rotisserie chicken, a dinner favorite.

So EW and Wyden shared a lighthearted chicken and also talked about weighty national issues, including gun control, student loan forgiveness and abortion protections — as well as the role Fred Meyer stores have played in Wyden's career.

After the Uvalde, Texas, school shooting, where 19 children and two teachers were murdered and 17 others wounded, Wyden says he's heard from young people in Oregon who have grown up with gun violence and feeling fed up with active shooter drills.

"There should be a right to a childhood," Wyden says.

Gun reform in Congress, Wyden says, is different this time compared to previous school shootings. "We're going to have these next few weeks," he says, adding that senators are ideally at home meeting with constituents.

Although President Joe Biden told Uvalde mourners May 30 that there would be gun control reform coming, he has also said that it's Congress' job. Wyden says there are a number of reform bills that Congress is working on.

"We've now got a group of Democrats and Republicans working to come up with something bipartisan," he says.

One is a background bill, HR 8, which narrowly passed the House of Representatives in 2021, but it hasn't been introduced in the Senate, likely due to the Democrats' lacking the necessary support to avoid a filibuster. The bill would prohibit a transfer of firearms between private parties unless a licensed gun dealer, manufacturer or importer has possession of the firearm and conducts a background check, according to a summary of the bill.

Wyden says he and Rep. Earl Blumenthal introduced a bill that would close a loophole that allows those who have been found guilty of domestic abuse to obtain firearms. It would end situations "where domestic violence abusers can keep their gun even when they have restraining orders" against them, he says. If the bill passes, he says he thinks it could lead to other piecemeal background check legislation.

As chair of the Senate Finance Committee, Wyden says he'll likely use the power of the committee to investigate whether firearm companies and banking institutions that help buyers finance purchases are following the tax law.

With 44 million Americans dealing with student loans, the Biden administration is reportedly considering an executive order that would forgive $10,000 of federal student loan debt held.

"There's also going to be an effort to dramatically expand public service opportunities that can drive down the debt," Wyden says. "I'm interested in that."

And with the pending U.S. Supreme Court ruling that could overturn Roe v. Wade, Wyden says he's going to work toward protecting women's data. According to a May 17 letter signed by Wyden and other senators, he criticized companies that use cellphone location data to target anti-abortion ads to women who visit abortion clinics.

After covering some of the nation's biggest problems, Wyden sat in the plastic chairs and the tan-walled dining area at Fred Meyer and reflected on the place that stores have had in his career. Among them is meeting the namesake owner in the 1970s when Wyden was the director for the Oregon chapter of the Gray Panthers, a senior citizens-oriented group modeled after the social justice-oriented Black Panthers. Speaking with Meyer about why Meyer should pay a reduced rate for bus fare, Wyden recalls walking him through the economics of it.

"Finally I had to say, 'Mr. Meyer, if you felt like it, you could probably just buy the bus company,'" he laughs.

Visiting Fred Meyer stores became a tradition as he spent more time on the road traveling to and from those 1,000 or so town hall meetings. And he's found it to be a way to keep up appearances with constituents.

"It's always really convenient to say hello to a lot of people," Wyden says. "And if you have a little extra time, you buy your toothpaste and socks." ■

To Build or To Buy?

AFTER COMPLETING THE FARMER'S MARKET PAVILION AND PLAZA, THE CITY ONCE AGAIN TURNS ITS ATTENTION TO CITY HALL

By Clayton Franke

When Sarah Medary started working for the city of Eugene in 1996 as a parks maintenance worker, one of her tasks was to tend to the landscaping around the old City Hall on Pearl Street. Now, she's the city manager, and she has a different task: find a new home for Eugene's City Hall.

The Eugene City Council hasn't conducted city business in a permanent City Hall in 10 years. Now, after completing the $9.3 million Farmer's Market Pavilion and Plaza downtown, the city is turning its attention to the absence of a City Hall. While a new City Hall is included as a part of the city's "town square concept plan," as of right now, its future is unclear, and instead of building a City Hall, the council is considering buying one, a decision causing some tension as the city looks at its current Lane Community College location.

So, why doesn't Eugene have a City Hall? In short, it's because the council chose to tear it down.

From 1964 to 2014, Eugene's old City Hall was on Pearl Street, two blocks east of the site of the new Farmers Market pavilion. In 2004, the city started work on a City Hall master plan, and over the next several years, the council considered several potential upgrades for City Hall, including building a new one at the existing City Hall site, building at the site of the "Butterfly" parking lot, and potentially buying the EWEB administration building to use as City Hall.

Ultimately, the council chose to tear down City Hall and build a new one at the existing site. The project budget was $15 million.

The last of the old City Hall came down in 2015 while the city conducted its business at the Lane County Public Service Building. Medary says that when the old building came down, the city had a design in place, had hired a contractor, and construction was set to break ground.

But after the teardown, the city learned price estimates for the building had soared to $25 million, and planning stalled.

Then, in 2018, the city swapped the old City Hall site for the "Butterfly" parking lot site with Lane County. According to Medary, part of the reason for the swap was the city's vision of the greater Park Blocks area as a home for City Hall and the Farmer's Market Pavilion, as well as the county's need for a new courthouse space. The city drafted a concept plan for the entire project in 2019, which included preliminary designs for a new City Hall north of the new Farmer's Market Pavilion and an interactive fountain and performance stage on the Park Blocks.

The city used Urban Renewal funds, aka tax increment financing, to build the pavilion. But a 2016 Urban Renewal plan amendment prohibits the use of these funds on a new City Hall.

When project costs for the Farmer's Market pavilion jumped to $9.8 million, the city no longer had enough funding to cover the Park Blocks improvements and City Hall, leading the council to move forward with the pavilion and put the other projects on hold.

Now, Medary says plans have been paused indefinitely for a City Hall north of the pavilion, a space that remains an empty gravel lot, despite City Hall's inclusion in the 2019 concept report.

Medary says the last time the city discussed designs for building a City Hall, price estimates for a 31,000 square foot building were "probably in the $35 million range."

According to the city's acting communications director Cambra Ward Jacobson, the city has $13.9 million in a City Hall reserve account.

In an April 22 interview, Mayor Lucy Vinis told Eugene Weekly that whether or not City Hall would be built near the pavilion was "very much an open question right now," and that the council has not discussed what might go in the lot instead of a City Hall.

The first question for the council, according to Medary and Vinis, is whether or not the city wants to continue its use of Lane Community College's Mary Spilde Center downtown. Vinis says the city has the option to negotiate a continued lease with LCC or even negotiate a purchase agreement, at which point the LCC building would become the new City Hall.

"The first question for council will be: do they want to proceed in negotiations with Lane Community College and stay where we are, rather than use that north part of the block for a City Hall," Vinis tells EW. "If they make that decision, then that north part of the block could then have another purpose. We could decide to do something else there."

The council discussed the city's lease with LCC, which ends in November 2023, during a May 25 work session. After Councilor Randy Groves inquired about the possibility of a purchase, Medary said LCC had indicated the school would be "very open" to a long-term lease option.

Several councilors said they would be interested in exploring long term options for the building, including Councilor Matt Keating, a former LCC board member, who said he would "enthusiastically welcome" further conversations about purchasing the building. Vinis agreed.

"Given how long this City Hall conversation has gone on, I'd like to see us move forward on something which we've actually already made significant progress on in terms of this building and our investment in this building," Vinis says.

According to Ward Jacobson, the city paid about $14,500 a month in the first year of the lease and about $16,000 a month in the second year of the lease. Beginning Dec. 1, the amount will increase 3 percent per year.

In 2010, the City Council, acting as the Urban Renewal Agency Board, approved the contribution of $8 million in Downtown Urban Renewal funds to the Spilde Center project, according to Ward Jacobson.

LCC External Affairs director Brett Rowlett says there was "strong support" for continuing the partnership with the city at a May 18 LCC Board of Education meeting, but that the board had not discussed the possibility of a purchase agreement, and instead the conversation focused on maintaining a long-term lease. He says the current agreement is working well for LCC because the school's enrollment is at an all-time low, and that LCC would like to maintain a downtown presence in the building.

Other users of the building say the city's presence has disrupted the building's intended function: education.

CONVERSATION HAS

WE'VE ACTUALLY

— Mayor Lucy Vinis

Aliscia Niles, a faculty member for the Adult Basic Skills Education program at LCC, says that when the city moved into the building in 2020, the ABSE program, along with the English as a Second Language program, was moved to the fourth floor from the second floor upon returning from remote learning. She says that while the fourth floor has the same square footage as the second floor, the second floor was designed specifically for adult education services, with computer labs and tutoring rooms, and that the fourth floor lacks these features.

"Lane's not following their own vision and mission around access, equity and inclusion in this process," Niles says. "There isn't any bigger equity issue than denying access to our most diverse students in their learning environment."

Rowlett says the college "worked to ensure there would be enough classroom space to meet department [needs]," and that the college provided 10 classrooms, the number requested by ABSE.

Niles also says the shift from educational use to office space undermines the integrity of future city and LCC bonds: voters in the LCC service area agreed to a bond that supported the Spilde Center as an education building, not as a City Hall. According to Rowlett, LCC used $9 million from an LCC bond passed in November 2008 to partially fund the Spilde Center.

"Why are we required to problem-solve the City Hall issue?" Niles says. "How is this on us, and why are we being sacrificed to solve the City Hall problem?"

At the work session, Councilor Emily Semple acknowledged that the building's design as an educational facility could be problematic.

"This is a fantastic classroom building and I think it was built really well," Semple says. "But I think it's a horrible office building."

The Spilde Center is two separate buildings and roughly half is academic space, where the city operates, and the other half is student housing. Several councilors questioned if a purchase of the Spilde Center would also include the housing.

Despite the support for continuing the current City Hall arrangement, at least one councilor disagrees. Councilor Mike Clark of north Eugene told EW in an interview that he thinks the council should purchase the former Eugene Water and Electric Board administration building near the river to serve as City Hall, an idea he's been pushing for 10 years.

EWEB relocated its headquarters from the 100,000 square-foot riverfront building to Roosevelt Boulevard. In 2018, EWEB declared the building a "surplus" property — according to city code, this gave the city exclusive right to bid on the property. According to EWEB spokesperson Aaron Orłowski, the city manager initially expressed interest.

Earlier in 2018, the city bought 16 acres of nearby riverfront property from EWEB, which is being developed into the Downtown Riverfront with a park and renovated Steam Plant.

But previous analyses from the city state that while the building would require "minimal renovation" to serve as City Hall, it would require city employees to "live with less than optimal functional layouts." In April 2021, the city waived its exclusive right to negotiate for the EWEB property, and the utility opened a public proposal process in May.

Orłowski says the city can still submit a proposal on the property, and EWEB will consider the community and social function of the building's future use.

Medary says the city has not considered submitting a proposal to purchase the EWEB building.

But Clark argues that the EWEB building is the city's best financial option, because the city could use Riverfront Urban Renewal money to pay for what the reserve can't. He says he thinks EWEB might sell the building for as low as $15 million.

"At some point, the Riverfront District, the Market District and the University District will all be part of what is considered a greater downtown," Clark says. "I can't think of a better setting for City Hall than our river, especially when it's so darn much cheaper."

At the City Council work session, Medary did not provide an estimated cost for the purchase of the LCC building.

Medary told the council she "would like to find more certainty with our lease" at LCC, pointing out that even if the council started construction immediately on a new City Hall, it wouldn't be finished by the end of 2023. Medary said she felt a responsibility to have some certainty about the city's involvement with the building before that date.

When the Farmer's Market Pavilion opens June 4, the people of Eugene will enjoy a morning of buying fresh produce in a shiny new building. But next to the pavilion, the gravel lot will remain bare, waiting for a decision about what the future of Eugene's town center will look like.

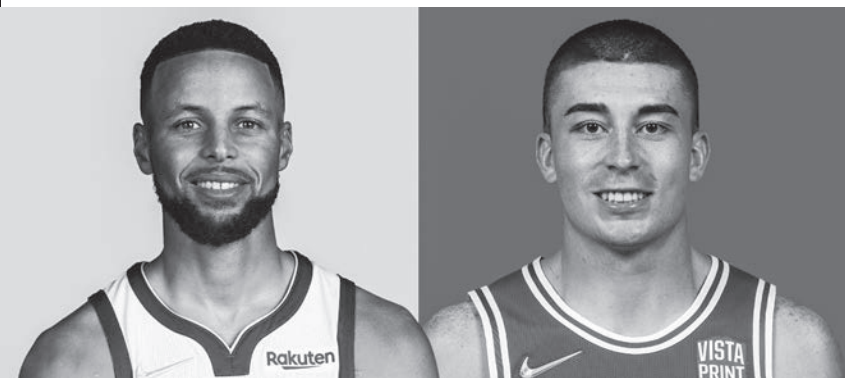

"The pavilion is a tremendous community asset, but it's not a substitute for a City Hall," Vinis says. "We still need a City Hall." ■

• "Enriching Library Services during the Pandemic and Beyond" is the City Club of Eugene program noon to 1:15 pm Friday, June 3, at the First United Methodist Church, 1376 Olive Street. Speakers are Will O'Hearn, Eugene Public Library director, and Angela Ocaña, library community services manager. No lunch. Live streaming is an option.

• Gun buyers short on cash are able to pay in installments through third party financing, just like buying a new pair of sneakers, according to a May 27 article in Bloomberg written by Max Reyes and former EW intern Michael Tobin. The reporters looked at firearms sold by Daniel Defense and same-day purchase installment plans through Credova that help people buy AR-15 style guns that start in price at around $2,000. With no end in sight to our gun violence epidemic, the last thing we need is making weapons easier to buy.

• It's time to pick our team for the NBA title playoffs. Some of us are still with Steph Curry and the Golden State Warriors, but some like the Boston Celtics partly because Payton Pritchard, former Oregon Duck, is on their roster. This best-of-seven series starts June 2, with the second game on Sunday, June 5. It's nice to sink into watching great basketball when the other news is so depressing.

• What we're reading: Chasing History: A Kid in the Newsroom by Carl Bernstein, published in 2022 by Henry Holt and Co. Any reader interested in journalism and government will find this well-written book fascinating, beginning with Bernstein's first job as a copyboy for the Washington Evening Star. Historian Doris Kearns Goodwin writes of the memoir: "The reader marvels as Bernstein, equipped with infinite curiosity and grit, goes from copyboy to newsman, from chasing history to making it."

• If you are as frantic as we are to do something about guns in America, check out VoteMamaFoundation.org, a foundation designed to help mothers with children at home who want to dive into politics. Maybe mamas will be better on background checks and other reasonable gun control laws than the papas have.

Live It Up, Lane County — You Deserve It

EUGENE WEEKLY'S SUMMER GUIDE ISSUE IS BIG AGAIN,
AND WE HOPE YOU ENJOY YOURSELVES THIS SEASON

By Dan Buckwalter

A light shines bright on a stage, kids frolic under the sun at parks and camps, fairs and festivals spring up and entire small towns close down for parades.

At the end of the tunnel that was the worst of the COVID pandemic — a dark and frustrating burrow we all had to go through these past two years — signs of life large and small have been growing since early this year. The surge of activity is welling for the summer months, and Lane County residents are ready to gather to celebrate the simple fact that they can gather in person, not virtually.

That's not to be taken for granted.

Eugene Weekly is here to help you navigate the multitude of listings that dot the landscape, with many events that are staples of Lane County now returning in person after a two-year absence.

For example, we welcome back the Oregon Country Fair in Veneta (July 8-10). It's good to see you again, as well as FOOD for Lane County's Chef's Night Out (June 6 at the Lane Events Center) and Creswell's all day 4th of July Celebration, complete with the morning parade. Then there's the return of musicals at The Shedd (Lady Be Good, starting July 8, and The Pajama Game, starting Sept. 9) as well as the Oregon Bach Festival (June 17-July 5).

EW also welcomes a new multi-day local event to the Summer Guide issue, EarthDance: Re-evolution (June 17-19), a three-day music and camping experience at Havenroot outside of Veneta, and welcomes back to the area after a seven-year absence the Faerieworlds Music Festival at Cuthbert Amphitheater (June 17-19).

It's good to see The Jazz Station, Oregon Contemporary Theatre, Cottage Theatre and many other venues now at full speed with music and plays this summer, too.

That's just a sample. World class athletes come to Hayward Field this summer for the World Athletics Championships Oregon22 (July 14-25), the first time this event has been held on U.S. soil. Vehicle traffic may well be clogged up in the university area during those 10 days, but the action on the track should be spectacularly smooth.

Junction City takes a spin with its annual Function 4 Junction — Show 'n Shine and Cruises (June 3-4), a fundraiser for the community and its children that showcases a bevy of contemporary and restored classic cars and trucks in parades in front of a throng of residents and out-of-towners.

Sadly, we will not see Art and the Vineyard for the third year in a row, but the Maude Kerns Art Center did have a fundraiser in early May, and it promises to hold more at its East 15th Avenue location this summer.

So step out and breathe in the atmosphere of a glorious time of year when the sun shines and kids and adults alike can frolic. You — all of us — deserve it.

Have Steinway, Will Travel

A PORTLAND PIANIST TAKES CLASSICAL MUSIC TO RURAL AREAS

By Dan Buckwalter

The 9-foot Steinway grand piano sits on a simple stage or a flat-bed trailer — a bit out of place, perhaps, in forests, national parks, calderas or historical sites for classical music concerts.

Then Hunter Noack, the founder of In A Landscape: Classical Music in the Wild, sits down at the piano and the wonder of classical music shines from beautiful and remote locations that range from San Francisco’s Botanical Garden to Wallowa Lake State Park in Joseph to Discovery Point at Crater Lake National Park.

In 2022 alone, In A Landscape’s seventh season will feature 60 outdoor concerts in six states, including Oregon. It was last in Lane County in 2019. In A Landscape will not be in our county this year, but Noack will perform a week’s worth of concerts in central Oregon — La Pine, Bend and Sisters — in July.

Its selling point is the landscapes, which offer a stunning backdrop for concert goers in a relaxed atmosphere, complete with wireless headphones for attendees so that they can wander or just lie down and close their eyes while listening.
That easygoing atmosphere is a trademark of In A Landscape. Noack, who was raised in Sunriver and lives in Portland, had studied in London, the University of Southern California and the San Francisco Conservatory of Music, and he has noted that he was looking to move away from formal concert halls and bring classical music to people who otherwise may not be able to hear it live.
So see the wonder of landscapes that are an easy drive from Eugene and hear some glorious music as well.

Schedule and ticket information for In A Landscape: Classical Music in the Wild is at InALandscape.org.

A Time To Shine For The Classics

THE ANNUAL FUNCTION 4 JUNCTION CLASSIC CAR CRUISE RETURNS TO JUNCTION CITY

By Dan Buckwalter

They will come from all over in contemporary and old-time cars and trucks, motorcycles and jeeps, even tow trucks and fire trucks from back in the day, all polished and tricked out for a parade.

Junction City will come to a standstill for all the vehicles to be admired June 3 and 4 when the annual — and very popular — Function 4 Junction Classic Car Cruise & Show ‘n Shine weekend revs up, a benefit held by the nonprofit Function for Junction to raise money for organizations that help children and schools in the Junction City community and the community itself.

The family-oriented weekend begins on Friday evening with the inclusive “All Years Cruise” through downtown Junction City. The next morning sees the “Show ‘n Shine & Classic Car Cruise,” again through downtown, with winners in each category announced at 3 pm. Finally, the “Classics Only Cruise” — for vehicles from 1974 and older — will start at 6 pm Saturday.

Expect to see convertibles, woody station wagons, classic Corvettes and Mustangs as well as muscle cars, not to mention vintage automobiles from the 1930s and ‘40s. There also will be classic hot rods. Last year, one entrant spruced up his hot rod so that flames shot upward out of stacks.

Additionally, there will be bingo, face painting and an early 20th century costume contest as well as live acoustic variety music from the group Riffle.

More information about the Function 4 Junction Classic Car Cruise & Show ‘n Shine, including registration for a vehicle to be entered, is at Function4Junction.com.

Deadhead Time

GET YOUR DEAD ON WITH PHIL LESH AND FRIENDS AT THE CUTHBERT

By Charles Gearing

Grab your tie-dye, folks. Phil Lesh and Friends will visit Cuthbert Amphitheater for a jam under the sun in mid June. They'll be looking for Eugene's cohort of Deadheads to welcome them to the stage.

Since Jerry Garcia's death, bassist Lesh has worked on a number of projects with different artists, co-founding Furthur with former Grateful Dead guitarist Bob Weir and forming his own group, Phil Lesh and Friends.

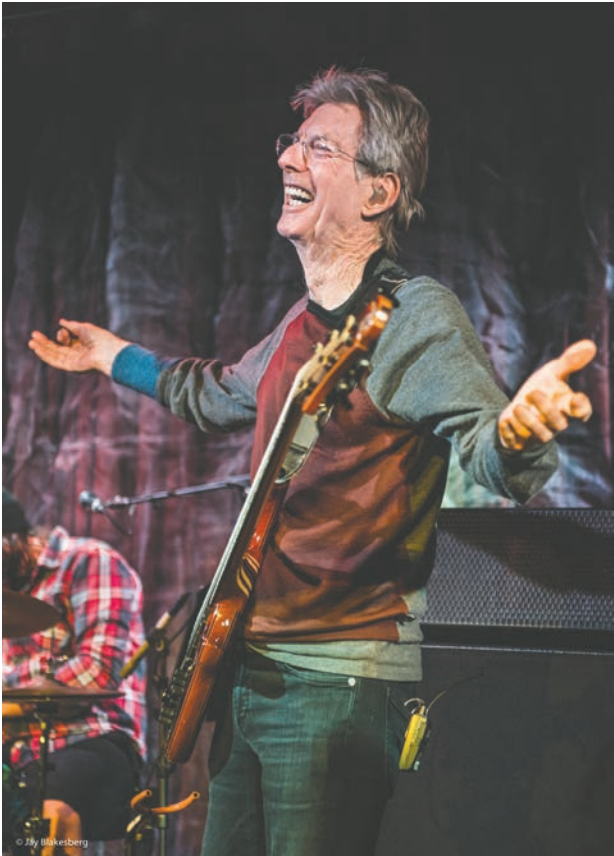

The group is true to its influences, playing an array of Grateful Dead favorites. At their most recent show April 10, Lesh and Friends played the Skull and Roses Festival in Ventura, California. The band's setlist was groovy, with "Mississippi Half-Step Uptown Todeloo," "Franklin's Tower," "Iko Iko" and "St. Stephen" to kick off the show.

Lesh and Friends have been known to mix in covers from other classic rock groups. They played The Band's "When I Paint My Masterpiece" during their four-night showing in Port Chester, New York, in 2021.

The group's Cuthbert show will mark the second appearance of their summer tour, which runs through the next few months before ending in mid October. After playing in Eugene, they'll head to Redmond, Washington, the following day, and Bonner, Montana, five days later.

Phil Lesh and Friends is Saturday, June 11 at the Cuthbert Amphitheater. Gates open 5:30 pm, show at 7 pm. Tickets $55 to $95.

The Infinite Loop

CHALLENGE YOURSELF TO A 12-HOUR OR 24-HOUR RUN THIS SUMMER

By Henry Houston

Have you ever wanted to experience a day in the life of Forrest Gump? Well, instead of running across the U.S. like he did in the eponymous film, the Bristow 24/12 Run allows you to run a 1.05 mile loop at Elijah Bristow State Park for 24 hours or 12 hours.

The event is a way for runners to test themselves against a gargantuan timed challenge, but some runners use it as a way to run their first ultra marathon distance (traditionally anything more than 50km) without the worry of missing the course cutoff time, organizer Renee Janssen says. The run typically attracts more than 150 runners for both times, she says.

Most running events have aid stations that offer water, electrolytes and nutritional gels, but the Bristow run has an aid station with flavor. She says runners can order pizza, quesadillas, rice bowls and more to refuel their body during the event. Although most trail races have steep elevation gains, the Bristow loop is pretty flat, but Janssen says there's a small hill that gets bigger with every passing loop, which has been dubbed "Heartbreak Hill" after the famous climb at the Boston Marathon.

Runners at races with designed routes usually don't see each other, but the Bristow loop — despite its monotony — is a way to bring the participants together, no matter their paces, she says. The course and the state park share the trail with horses. She says the trail will have signs notifying equestrians the race is happening, but if you're running, keep an eye out for horse poop.

The Elijah Bristow 24/12 Run is Saturday, June 18. Registration closes June 9. For more information, visit GoBeyondRacing.com.

OREGON BACH FESTIVAL RETURNS TO LIVE PERFORMANCES THIS SUMMER

By Bob Keefer

The Oregon Bach Festival returns to the stage this month in Eugene after a two-year pandemic break with a battle of the conductors highlighting the big three choral works by J.S. Bach. It’s the first time in three decades the festival has presented all three works in a single season.

Three finalists to become the 52-year-old festival’s artistic director — a position that has been vacant since the University of Oregon fired Matthew Halls from the post in 2017 — will each conduct one of Bach’s big three choral works in a series of Tuesday evening concerts at the Hult Center

Kazem Abdullah, former music and artistic director of the city of Aachen, Germany, conducts the Mass in B Minor June 21; Eric Jacobsen, music director of the Orlando Philharmonic, conducts the St. John Passion June 28; and Miguel Harth-Bedoya, former music director of the Eugene Symphony, conducts the St. Matthew Passion July 5. All concerts start at 7:30 pm.

The festival will also present Abdullah conducting Mozart’s Symphony No. 41, the “Jupiter,” on June 18; Jacobsen conducting Beethoven’s Symphony No. 7 on June 28; and Harth-Bedoya conducting a program he designed that explores the musical influence on other composers of Bach and the music community in Leipzig

Other highlights at this summer’s festival include the return of violinist Monica Huggett, who will open the festival by performing and conducting Bach’s Musical Offering on June 17; pianists Lara Downes and Simone Dinnerstein performing with the festival chorus and orchestra in a program designed by Downes with music by Kurt Weill, Sam Cooke, Meredith Monk, Reena Esmail and George Gershwin, and the world premiere of Paola Prestini’s Let Me See the Sun on June 22; and baritone Tyler Duncan singing songs from Schubert’s Winterreise on June 22.

The festival runs June 17 through July 5 at the Hult Center, Beall Concert Hall and other venues. For tickets and more information, go to OregonBachFestival.org.

EUGENE WEEKLY.COM

It's time for the cooks to take center stage. For the first time in two years — and at a new home — FOOD For Lane County's Chef's Night Out is returning. Chef's Night Out outgrew its Hult Center lobby home since 1993, and this year's roster of restaurants is a perfect example of that growth. Upward of 40 eateries — from Café Soriah to Da Nang Vietnamese Eatery, Lion & Owl to Pig & Turnip — will be taking part in the event and offering samples, including from the students of the Network Charter School Culinary Arts Program. Breathe in the aroma and sample the slow cooked food from Bacon Nation or the delightful fare of Screamin' Jay's Hot Lunch. Wash it down with a glass of merlot from Bo's Wine Depot or the Oregon Wine Lab. For dessert, try something from Elegant Elephant Baking Co., Mad Batters Bakery or Pinch of Salt Bakery. To make sure you get your fill, follow dessert with beer from either Falling Sky Brewing or Ninkasi Brewing. It's been a rough two years for restaurants, but the maestros of the kitchen will be out in full force, so bring your appetite for a good cause and vote for the People's Choice Award. It will be worth it.

FOOD For Lane County's Chef's Night Out is 6:30 to 9 pm Monday, June 6, at the Lane Events Center, 796 W. 13th Avenue. $75 for general admission, $95 for early entrance at 5:30 pm (only 250 early spots available). — Dan Buckwalter

The choice is yours – for now.

Today, we have a choice between natural gas and electricity. But the Eugene City Council is considering a proposal by activists that would ban natural gas in new homes, businesses and industries.

They call it “electrification.” In fact, we’re already free to choose electricity. Anyone who wants to can have all electric appliances in their home.

We’re also free to choose natural gas. And most of us do. In Oregon, roughly two out of three choose natural gas for home heating. It’s efficient, affordable and reliable. And its use in Oregon homes accounts for 4% of the state’s emissions.¹

What’s really on the city council agenda is “forced electrification” – a ban on choice.

There is an inconvenient fact about forced electrification – namely, about half of Oregon’s electricity is generated by coal and natural gas.² Electric utilities in Oregon use about as much natural gas to generate electricity as is delivered by all the natural gas utilities in the state combined.³

It’s true that Eugene is in a unique position compared to most communities because the city’s electric utility is primarily reliant on hydropower from the Bonneville Power Administration. But energy systems are regional, and the electric and gas systems depend on each other to serve communities. Each system provides benefits that together offer greater reliability and resiliency.

What a ban really means is eliminating natural gas as a choice in homes and businesses for heating and cooking – and in most cases, using even more of it in less efficient power plants to produce electricity. There is a better path to a renewable future.

Be a voice for energy choice.

The commitment of council members to their constituents is important, given the serious and immediate issues at hand – homelessness, affordable housing, a mental health crisis and public safety concerns. But they are pressured weekly by activists demanding policies that polling shows are not representative of the community’s desire for a diversified energy system.

For example, in a recent survey of Eugene by the respected and nonpartisan firm DHM Research, 75% of voters believe “families and businesses should have a choice of energy options to meet their needs and not have their choices mandated by their local government.”

If you agree, please share your thoughts directly with city decision makers by emailing them at mayorcouncilandcitymanager@eugene-or.gov, or go to engagenwnatural.com. You’ll find more information, as well as other convenient ways to make your voice heard.

We believe working together is the best approach. We can set a course of action that achieves our renewable energy future without sacrificing affordability, reliability – or choice.

NW Natural is committed to a carbon-neutral future. We believe a collaborative effort will produce better results – faster and more affordably.

Breakthroughs in renewable natural gas and renewable hydrogen are happening now: Two renewable energy projects are already underway in Lane County. Go to engagenwnatural.com for more information.

EFFICIENT. AFFORDABLE. BLUE.

As one of the oldest companies in the Northwest, we’ve been a critical part of our communities for more than 160 years. We provide warmth and comfort to more than 2.5 million people every day. And we do it reliably, safely and affordably – consistently posting among the strongest customer satisfaction scores in the West, according to J.D. Power.

PLUG into a CLEAN future!

"...No one should make it easy for the gas interests to be building out 30 or 40-year infrastructure, which we're then stuck with..."

EUGENE PORCHFEST RETURNS FOR ITS SECOND YEAR WITH LOCAL MUSICAL ACTS AND MOVEMENT CLASSES

By Henry Houston

With long days of summer upon us, it's time to kick off outdoor music season and soak up the sun at the Eugene PorchFest.

In its second year, the outdoors-oriented Eugene PorchFest is bringing together a variety of local musical acts for a five-day festival, which started Wednesday, June 1, and runs through Sunday, June 5. The festival is held at various locations in Eugene-Springfield, and it's giving some newcomer bands longer set times than the traditional night venues.

"I felt like they wouldn't want a band named Titsweat on their list," laughs Gracie Schatz, bassist and singer for the band in question, who's performing at the festival on Sunday, June 5. "I'm really excited that they want us to play. We're stoked."

PorchFest events have occurred throughout the U.S. for years, from Ithaca, New York, to Milwaukie, Oregon. Rather than having shows indoors, the spirit of PorchFest is to have musical acts perform outdoors, though not limited to porches. The 2022 Eugene PorchFest's locations are the homes of individuals, ranging in neighborhoods from the Whiteaker to south Eugene to downtown Springfield.

The first year that the Eugene PorchFest was held was 2021, and it was a hit, organizer Eric Alterman says via email. "All of the shows sold out, and so many audience members expressed enthusiasm for PorchFest for a second year," he says. "We never doubted that we would bring it back for another season — it was more a question of 'when' than 'if.'"

The Eugene PorchFest is working with the local nonprofit ArtCity, he adds, so it can take donations from individuals and businesses who want to support the festival.

Eugene PorchFest features a variety of musical acts, from the established (Mood Area 52 and Samba Ja) to the more avant garde (Eugene Difficult Music Ensemble and Project Libracello). In creating this year's lineup, Alterman says, organizers followed the guiding principle of "musical abundance."

There are more shows than last year's, which he says reflects the event's popularity, and there's diversity in the represented genres. "We include everything from classical music to experimental noise-rock, and musical traditions from parts of the world including Mexico, Brazil, Zimbabwe, Senegal, the Balkans and more," he says.

The festival also includes the genre of "garage glam," which Schatz uses to describe Titsweat. Formed in the summer of 2021, the band's name was a joke at first, a description of the sort of sweat that the trio experienced when practicing in a hot room, she says. "We like the rawness and looseness of being a garage rock band but still also getting dressed up, performative and campy a little bit," she says about the garage glam descriptor.

And that fits with the band's influences. Some of Titsweat's inspirations are '80s and '90s female rock stars, Schatz says, such as Kate Bush, Alanis Morissette, Bikini Kill and Sleater Kinney.

"The priority of the music is catharsis," Schatz says about the band's songs. "Sometimes we like to play playful songs that are really fun and catchy, but we're not afraid to dig into more emotional material. It feels vulnerable at times, but people have a lot of fun at our shows."

Schatz says Titsweat has been playing shorter, 30-minute sets on the local circuit — Old Nick's, Luckey's and other venues — but Eugene PorchFest is an opportunity to have an extended repertoire. And she says being a gender diverse band, the queer community feels safe at its shows, so it's a place for people to shake their bodies.

Titsweat's show in College Hill won't be the only place to move your body. In addition to several other musical acts, this year's event has a movement component, which Altman says organizers envisioned from the beginning but wanted to keep the first year simple. One of the organizers, Amalia Coxe-Treiger, is a yoga teacher, he says, and has designed the movement portions and also leads some of the sessions. He adds that the movement workshops — ranging from Hatha yoga to voice-oriented exercises — are held in the mornings and afternoons and can mesh well with the shows later in the day to give festival-goers a complete experience.

"Our overall intention as a festival has been to nourish the spirit of our community, born out of our collective experience of isolation during the COVID pandemic," Altman says. "Hopefully some people who are drawn to one part of PorchFest will discover something new, whether that is a musical artist or a movement practice." ■

Eugene PorchFest runs Wednesday, June 1, through Sunday, June 5. For more information about locations and to buy tickets, visit EugenePorchFest.com. Titsweat performs 6 pm Sunday, June 5, in the College Hill neighborhood. Tickets start at $5.

FREE WILL ASTROLOGY

BY ROB BREZSNY

ARIES (MARCH 21-APRIL 19): Who loves the truth better than you Aries people? Who has the greatest potential to speak the real story in every situation, even when it requires extra courage? Who has more fun than you in discovering and defining and expressing the raw facts? In my Book of Life, you Rams are radiant beacons of candor — the people I go to when I need accuracy and honesty. And all I'm saying here will be especially crucial in the coming weeks. The whole world needs concentrated doses of your authenticity. Now read this pep talk from Aries philosopher St. Catherine of Siena: “Let the truth be your delight; let it always be in your mouth, and proclaim it when it is needed. Proclaim it lovingly and to everyone, especially those you love with a special love — but with a certain congeniality.”

TAURUS (APRIL 20-MAY 20): Before the 20th century, you couldn't buy a loaf of bread that was already sliced into thin pieces. Then in 1912, the American inventor Otto Frederick Rohwedder developed a slicing machine. But all his work, including the blueprints and the machine prototypes, was destroyed in a fire. He had to seek new funding and begin again. Sixteen years later, his innovation was finally ready for broad public use. Within five years, most of the bread in the U.S. was sold sliced. What does this have to do with you? I am picking up an Otto Frederick Rohwedder vibe when I turn my visions to you, Taurus. I suspect that in the coming months, you, too, will fulfill a postponed dream.

GEMINI (MAY 21-JUNE 20): A blogger named Sweetlikeacherry reminds us, “Some epiphanies are only possible when you put away your phone and go completely offline for a while.” She adds that sometimes you also need to at least partially avoid your phone and the internet if you hope to incubate new visions of the future and unlock important discoveries in your creative work and summon your untamed genius. According to my astrological analysis, all these possibilities are especially likely and necessary for you in the coming weeks. I trust you will carry out the necessary liberations to take full advantage.

CANCER (JUNE 21-JULY 22): Poet Carolyn Kizer (1925–2014) won a Pulitzer Prize for her poetry. She was smart! But when she was young and still studying her craft in college, a professor objected to one of her poems. He said, “You have pigs in this poem; pigs are not poetic.” Kizer was incensed at such ignorance. She testified, “I got up and walked out of that class and never went back.” Judging from the astrological omens, I suspect you may have comparable showdowns headed your way. I advise you to be like Kizer. You are the only one who truly knows the proper subjects of your quest. No one else has the right or the insight to tell you what your work (or play) should be about.

LEO (JULY 23-AUG. 22): Leo author James Baldwin said it wasn't often “that two people can laugh and make love, too — make love because they are laughing and laugh because they're making love. The love and the laughter come from the same place: but not many people go there.” Your assignment, Leo, is to be the exception to Baldwin's rule during the coming weeks. According to my analysis of the astrological omens, there's a high possibility that interesting eros can converge with humorous fun in a glorious synergy. You will have a knack for conjuring up ribald encounters and jovial orgasms. Your intuition will guide you to shed the solemnity from your bliss and replace it with sunny, carefree cheer.

VIRGO (AUG. 23-SEPT. 22): I'm worried you will over-indulge in your pursuit of perfection during the coming weeks. It's fine to be exquisitely skillful and masterful; I hope you do that. But if you get obsessed with flawlessness, you will risk undoing your good intentions. As an antidote, I offer you two pieces of advice. The first is from actor and activist Jane Fonda. She said, “We are not meant to be perfect; we are meant to be whole.” The second counsel is from philosopher and psychologist William James, who wrote, “Perfection is not attainable, but if we chase perfection, we can catch excellence.”

LIBRA (SEPT. 23-OCT. 22): Author Mustafa Mahmoud described the signs of love between two people: 1. feeling a comfortable familiarity; 2. having no urge or need to lie; 3. being natural, not trying to be different from who one is; 4. having little or no possibility of being embarrassed in front of the other person; 5. experiencing silence as delicious, not alienating; 6. enjoying the act of listening to the other person. I bring these pointers to your attention, Libra, because the coming months will be a favorable time to define and redefine your understanding about the signs of love. How do you feel about Mahmoud's ideas? Are there any more you would like to add?

SCORPIO (OCT. 23-NOV. 21): “We do not love each other without changing each other,” wrote author Madeleine L'Engle. Meditate on that gem, Scorpio. Now is a perfect time for you and your loved ones to acknowledge, honor and celebrate the ways your love has changed each other. It may be true that some transformations have been less than ideal. If that's the case, the coming weeks will be a favorable time to correct those trends. As for the positive changes that you and your allies have stimulated in each other: I hope you will name them and pledge to keep doing more of that good work.

SAGITTARIUS (NOV. 22-DEC. 21): “I always deserve the best treatment, because I never put up with any other,” wrote Sagittarian novelist Jane Austen. Sagittarian politician Stacey Abrams said, “From the moment I enter a room, I am clear about how I intend to be treated and how I intend to engage.” You'll be wise to cultivate those attitudes in the next seven weeks, Sagittarius. It's high time for you to raise your self-respect in ways that inspire others to elevate their appreciation and regard for you.

CAPRICORN (DEC. 22-JAN. 19): In 1963, Jim Munro and Alice Munro founded Munro's Books, a store in Victoria, British Columbia. After being on the job for a few months, Alice found she was not impressed with many of the products they sold. “I can write better books than this,” she told Jim. Five years later, she published her first collection of short stories, Dance of the Happy Shades. Fourteen books later, she won the Nobel Prize in Literature. Will the coming months bring your equivalent of Alice Munro's pivotal resolution? I suspect they could.

AQUARIUS (JAN. 20-FEB. 18): “True love for whatever you are doing is the answer to everything,” proclaimed performance artist Marina Abramovic. Amen to that righteous attitude! I hope you will embrace it in the coming weeks. I hope your heart and imagination will reveal all you need to know to bring tender fresh streams of true love to the essential activities of your life. Now is an excellent time to redefine the meaning of the word “love” so it applies to all your relationships and pursuits.

PISCES (FEB. 19-MARCH 20): A homeless woman in a wheelchair stopped where I was sitting outside a café. She was pushing her belongings in a small shopping cart. “Would you like to go dancing?” she said to me. “There's a nearby park that has a great grassy dance floor.” “Maybe another day,” I told her. “My energy is low. I've had a lot of personal challenges lately.” I'm sure the expression on my face was less-than-ebullient. “Cheer up, mister,” she told me. “I'm psychic, and I can tell you for sure that you will live a long life and have many more fine adventures. I'll be in the park if you change your mind.” My mood instantly brightened. “Thanks!” I yelled toward her as she rolled away. Now I predict that you, Pisces, will have comparable experiences in the coming days. Are you willing to welcome uplifting surprises?

SAVAGE LOVE

Expensed With

BY DAN SAVAGE

I'm a 31-year-old queer person living in Europe. I recently met a 46-year-old man. We were visiting the same city for work and met on an app and went on a series of amazing dates. We have a lot of similar interests and work in parallel fields. Now we're planning a trip to see each other. It's partly a work trip for him, but we will take a vacation together after the work part of the trip for him is over. To get to the point... he makes a lot more money than I do. He has offered to cover as much of the costs as he needs to. I feel like I'm out of my league here! I really like him and he seems to really like me but I'm struggling to fight feeling like this is a "Daddy and His Boy" situation. Do I need to fight that feeling or lean into it? It's not a dynamic he said he wants. I don't mind if we agree that's what we are doing. But I don't want to fall into a Daddy/Boy dynamic accidentally because of money and "status." How do I date him like I would someone closer to my age and income?

— Knowing Economic Position Tenuous

If the Daddy/boy dynamic isn't something you want (if it doesn't turn you on and/or you worry it'll make things weird), and it isn't something he wants (assuming he didn't just say that because he thought it was what you wanted to hear), then you definitely shouldn't "lean into it." Instead, you should handle the expense of this trip the same way committed couples with large income disparities split the rent. If you were making $50K a year and he was making $150K a year and you wanted to move in together but weren't ready to merge your finances, you should pay a quarter of the rent and he would pay three quarters of the rent. Same should go for utilities, food, and other expenses.

But you're not moving in together, KEPT, you're just going on a vacation, so things can be a little looser. If you can afford to fly coach and he wants to fly first class, he should cover the difference between coach and first-class fares. If he wants to cover the hotel (a major expense), you should cover meals — maybe not all of them, particularly if he wants to eat in fancy places, but enough of them that it will be clear to you, to him, to your waiter, and to the angels and saints watching from heaven that you aren't a kept boy. (Nothing will make you feel less "kept" than pulling out your own credit card.)

And the first part of the trip is for business and he would presumably be going with or without you, KEPT, you shouldn't feel guilty about not paying for meals or the hotel on that leg — a hotel room he would be staying in with or without you, meals he would be putting on his expense account with or without you — but maybe treat him to a surprise excursion on that leg of the trip that you can afford. (Assuming either of you wants to leave your hotel room at this stage of your relationship.)

The kind of disparities you describe — in ages, incomes and the stages of your respective careers — are something almost all couples have faced — or in the case of income and career advancement, something most couples eventually face. But don't spend too much time thinking about how you're going to make this work over the long-term; you just met, you really liked each other, and you're both willing to travel long distances to keep seeing each other. That should be your focus right now, KEPT. If he wasn't comfortable covering most of the expenses, he wouldn't have offered to do that. He could've spent his vacation time in the city where you live instead. Of course, there's a chance it was a trick offer — he offered to cover the expense of the trip expecting you would turn it down — and he's going to punish you in some passive-aggressive way for taking him up on it. If that happens, well, you can go back to dating boys closer to your age and tax bracket and/or well-off guys who don't play games.

I'm a single and kinky gay man, doing mainly vanilla dating at the moment. Recently, I got dumped by a guy because I fessed up to being kinky. I also told him I believe in God. I realize that might appear contradictory, but I don't see why both can't co-exist. He told me he can't date anyone who's sexually deviant who also believes in "fairies at the bottom of the garden." Both were equally problematic for him: my belief in God and my kinks. I wasn't expecting to be both kink-shamed and God-shamed in the same breath. Are there such things as kinky Christians? Where can I find my tribe?

— Frustrated About Insultingly Terminating Hookup

One of the kinkiest guys I ever met — dungeon-in-his-basement kinky, flog-you-until-you-are-screaming kinky — was an episcopal priest. So yeah, FAITH, there are kinky Christians out there. But instead of sitting at home alone wondering where your tribe is, get out there and find your tribe. Get on kinky dating apps, go to leather/fetish events, date some non-vanilla guy, make some non-vanilla friends. If you find a welcoming tribe and it turns out you're the only believer, so long as no one judges or shames you, FAITH, join that tribe. If you meet guys who have a problem with your faith, they don't get to be a part of your tribe.

As for the guy who called you a sexual deviant — what the hell does he think he is? Without deviation from the norm, there wouldn't be "normal" gay guys for that asshole to date at all. Some of us may deviate more than others, FAITH, but that's as true for gay people as it is for straight people.

A man I very casually "dated" for ONE MONTH more than 15 YEARS AGO — a man I have maintained a friendship with ever since — tells his new girlfriends that I am his "ex-girlfriend." This disclosure causes a lot of unnecessary awkwardness between whoever his current girlfriend might be and me. I've told him he shouldn't do that because I was never officially his girlfriend. For 99.999% of the time I've known him, we've been friends, compared to the .001% of the time when we were very casually dating. He says he doesn't want to lie?? But it's not a lie to say we are friends! I hate the awkwardness that it causes between me and the women he dates now. They never have a chance to get to know and trust me. Help me explain this to him so he finally gets it!

— Never His Girlfriend

He gets it, NHG. The awkwardness he's creating between you and his girlfriend-of-the-moment — the awkwardness you see as unnecessary and avoidable — is exactly what he wants. Introducing you as his ex makes things awkward with his current, and his current girlfriend's intuitive sense that he's either intentionally or thoughtlessly making things awkward makes him a less appealing partner. He doesn't want a commitment or anything long-term, and instead of being honest about that, he's weaponizing your existence to erect barriers between him and whoever he's dating at the moment. He may not be doing it knowingly, but he's doing it just the same, and it's a shitty thing to do to a friend.

And the next time he does it, NHG, object and object loudly: "Don't be ridiculous! I was NEVER your girlfriend!"

Hey, Everybody: The Southern Baptist Convention, the largest protestant denomination in the United States, has always been terrible. It was founded in 1845 by supporters of slavery and the organization is racist to its core still. Leaders, churches and preachers in the Southern Baptist Convention have also been the loudest anti-gay voices in the country for decades, and lately they've been loudly promoting the lie that gay and trans people — by simply existing — are somehow grooming children. Well, it turns out the groomers were in the building all along. In their buildings, in their megachurches, in their leadership — and they weren't waving rainbow flags or reading from "Heather Has Two Mommies." They were waving Confederate battle flags and reading from Leviticus. A blockbuster report released last week documents decades of sexual abuse committed by pastors and leaders of the Southern Baptist Convention. The same preachers who were accusing gays and lesbians of 'coming for your kids' were the ones coming for your kids. And in them. As with all power-obsessed social conservatives, as with all Trumpers (and the Southern Baptist Convention is now a Trump property), every accusation — of corruption, of rigged elections, of sexual abuse — is an admission of guilt.

Cat Rescue & Adoption Network

Cat of the Week

CHARMIN is a beautiful, long-haired, all-white senior adult female kitty about 11 years old. She's very playful once she gets comfortable with you, and is such a sweet and affectionate girl who loves to cuddle. She would do in best in a home without young kids or other pets, and with a cat-savvy adopter who will respect her boundaries. She loves to sleep with you, and will make an excellent companion. She's in excellent health, spayed, vaccinated, microchipped, negative for FeLV and FIV, and had a complete dental. To meet Charmin, please call 541-225-4955 option 1, or visit our website at CatRescues.org

We are the longest running cat rescue in Lane County and are all-volunteer and receive no public funding. Since 2007, we have provided care and found homes for over 4000 cats.

Meet handsome guinea pig, Pumba! He has gorgeous black, white and caramel fur with brown eyes. Pumba is an American Guinea Pig so his fur is short and grows in one direction. He is on the shy side around new people and is looking for a patient family that will give him time to warm up to his new environment. He loves lap time, cuddling and veggie snacks! Pumba weighs about 1.90 lbs. and will go home with a certificate for a free vet exam. He would do best with older children who can respect his space and he must be adopted to an inside only home. Pumba is one cute piggie that would make a family very happy! If you are interested in adopting some of our wonderful guinea pigs or just want to learn more about guinea pigs as family pets, please call Greenhill for resources.
